The evolution of the quality of organic citrus fruits, the lack of evidence of direct quantification of isoprenoids, polyphenols and acylated flavonoids are weaknesses of this methodology. The present work aims to develop a fast, cheap, simple and accurate analytical methodology to quantify the isoprenoids, polyphenols and acylated flavonoids in lyophilized oranges. The methodology includes two steps, (1) ultra-sonication of the samples, (2) defatting process for samples. An analytical methodology was developed and optimized for the analyses of isoprenoids, polyphenols and acylated flavonoids in lyophilized oranges with HPLC-DAD-MS and HPLC-MS/MS. Isoprenoids, polyphenols and acylated flavonoids were separated and quantified by using HPLC with UV-visible diode array and quadrupole time of flight (QTOF) mass detectors, respectively. The optimized method was validated according to the acceptance criteria that were established for quality control of the biomarkers of the oxidative stability of citrus fruit and was applied for analyses of 20 commercial orange samples, with good results. The present methodology can be used to qualify and quantify the biomarkers of the oxidative stability in other foodstuffs.Kitab al-Mukhtasar fi Usul al-Kulliyyat Kitab al-Mukhtasar fi
